Quick Payoff for my Home Security Cameras and Wireless Security Systems

The best money I spent on our remodel last month was a hundred and fifty bucks for a pair of home security cameras. Our money was that of most young newlyweds – very limited – and my wife was unsure of my decision.

We stayed in our home for eight weeks when we got ready to do the very necessary renovations we had talked about when we purchased the property. Structurally the house was great, and our land – a few acres and a few miles from town – was exactly what we had been looking for. The house itself was outdated and very small – we were just going to do what we could, when we could.

To stretch funds we performed a lot of the work ourselves. After a couple days we loaded the garage with building materials, cabinets, counter tops, and gear we purchased for our big venture. We had to buy a table saw, two special hand saws, a couple drills, two ladders, and several different hand tools and supplies. Our tiny garage – with a door that did not close properly attached to a house with no burglar alarm – had almost two thousand dollars worth of stuff in it. As soon as the truck was unloaded I immediately began mounting my two wireless home security cameras. I decided on wireless for many reasons, the main one being the ability to simply mount the camera without hardwiring it to a receiver. So, if I choose to reconfigure the wireless cameras I am saved the hassle of rewiring.

I put one camera on the porch of the house looking down toward the entry way. I mounted the second in the backyard aimed at the gate and door. The system allows us to get on to the web and see our property sort of like wireless CCTV cameras, so we figured out that feature and called it a night.

The very next day my wife told her girlfriends at work our new wireless surveillance cameras. She logged on to show them the pictures and she just barely noticed in the background that the tool shed was hanging wide open. She called wondering if I had left it open. As soon as I said no she saw the garage door open and a man running out with an armful of my new tools. The cops caught him just a few miles down the highway. He had spotted us unloading the tools and snuck in the next day to try and rob us. If he would have hung around long enough to see the home security cameras going up he may have saved himself some jail time.
