Head Off For A Trip To Disneyland Paris Through The Channel Tunnel

One of the best ways to give your kids a treat would be to take them to Disneyland Paris. You can get there quick and easy through the Channel Tunnel without having to worry about a boat being cancelled due to rough seas or having to endure terrible sea sickness for the same reason. The crossing from Folkestone to Calais only takes thirty five minutes and once you have gone through the tunnel you are only a few hours away from Disneyland - it normally takes about four hours. Not only is this a convenient way of travelling to this fabulous location but it is also one of the cheapest.

Because there is a lot to see and do at Disneyland Paris, it would be a good idea to spend at least a couple of days there. Although you could conceivably get there and back in one day, it would probably not be much fun and your kids would not thank you for putting them back in the car again after such a long day; you would have to brace yourself for quite a bit of complaining. We can take day trips to the continent now but it really is best to spend more than one day there. Luckily there are some reasonably priced accommodation possibilities near to the resort.

Disneyland Paris is something that kids just love and driving there is a great and affordable option. You also get to see a bit of France along the way; to see more why not add a couple of days and visit a few more places. Because you will have your own car, the continent is your oyster and you can just head wherever you like once you have had your fill of Disneyland. However, you will probably find more than enough to keep you occupied in Disneyland - at least for one trip. The Channel Tunnel makes the whole trip so much easier and pleasant and makes visiting Paris as easy as visiting a city in the UK.

Today, more and more families are taking the car and driving to their holiday destination abroad. Many people head to the South Coast to grab the ferry to france.
