The Best Time For You To Wed

One of the first thing you need to do when planning your wedding is to set your wedding date. It is a fun project, but be prepared to be challenged. Determining the best possible wedding date can be harder than it sounds. You have to consider other events and dates before you can set the date. Some factors in choosing your wedding date includes venue availability, holidays, school schedules, and so on.

Usually, there would be 12 to 18 months between the engagement and the wedding day. Know that a year might not be enough to plan a wedding with all its details. You also have to look at the schedules of those people who are important to you. If you want the most important people in your life to attend your wedding, you must consider their schedule. Business assignments, birthdays, graduations, vacations, and other events may prevent people important to you attending your wedding day.

You will be in for a challenge if you decide to get married during the wedding season. Prices would be higher, and vendors and venues would be unavailable. Consequently, be prepared to pay premium for reception sites, photography services, flowers, limos, etc. You should also consider the challenges based on availability. You should keep in mind that your dream location might not be available on your wedding.

The months of May to September are the hottest months for weddings. You can try not getting married during this season if you can. November to April gives you the opportunity to choose better reception venues. In addition to having more options, you are going to be in much better position to negotiate a better price. During the slower months, you are bound to get better service because more vendors are competing for your business.

If you choose to get married on a Saturday, you should be prepared to face many other brides who also want your venue and services. Saturday is the most convenient day for your invitees, but it means you have to deal with scheduling challenges and hire costs. Fridays and Sundays are considered the next best days and are still much more convenient than other days.

Understand that all wedding dates have their advantages and disadvantages. Your biggest challenge is to choose the best wedding date based on your needs and wants.
